BARINU INSTITUTE DEVELOPMENT FUND

Poverty is an incubator for conflict and ironically conflict accentuates poverty. While some progress has been made in the field of international development to reduce extreme poverty and reach the millennium development goals by 2015, however the global economic crisis has reversed most of these gains. Extreme poverty can be a precipitator of regional political instability which can have a ripple effect and grow into a global economic and political crisis.

Given the complexity of the regional and global political framework and the unpredictability of natural disasters, it has become imperative for international development organizations to work together to mitigate the extreme poverty which are further accentuated by these occurrences.

One may ask, why collaborate? What is the value especially for large and multifaceted institutions with large resources? Well the answer is simple, cooperation will enable the institutions leverage their comparative advantage, and it will ameliorate the tendency for group think. Small organizations will respond quicker as they are less layered and more nimble. Large organizations will ensure sustainability given their immense resources and economics of scale.

Why support Barinu Institute for Economic Development? Barinu Institute is a unique organization with members in more than 15 different countries. Barinu Institute is also composed of experts who have dedicated more than 600 days of consistent international development work both educational and practical infrastructure development. Barinu Institute supported the World Bank in 2010 in increasing its replenishment of IDA fund which resulted in an increase to $49.3 billion the most in its history.

Barinu Institute needs about $5 billion to undertake its infrastructure projects as well as its educational training seminars around the world.
